by the advocacy of practical moral rem." This is the question in a nutshell

The prohibitionists are impractical moral reformers, and they should give some heed to the opinions of such men as Revs. Crosby and Beecher, and other ministers who, n head of sheep.
It is said that in Illinois the English breeds outnumber the Merinos. It is more than likely that this is the only State in which this is the case.
In many parts of the country reports abow that stock sheep are going up. This is encouraging, but nothing more than we have expected.
The London market some tends. while they would like to see prohibition at the same time see the utter futility of the scheme, or, as Bescher says, "absolute prohibition is an absolute impossibility." The traffic will exist no matter how many laws are enacted prohibiting it. This fact recognized, and no honest prohibitionist will deny it, is it not better to regulate it by practical laws and make it pay its share of e tax burdens than to permit it to be carried on in an illegal manner with all is the attendant evils and compel the people to pay the charges that would otherwise be obtained through a wise license law. The people of Ohio have had some ex

We hear a good deal these days about Democratic economy and reform, and from the assertions of some Bourbon journals one would think that never before has the country been blessed with such an economical administration. But the figures do not back these assertions. The present administration went in under the cry of reform. The Democratic speakers in the campaign promised that if Clave.

The advantages of a good sheap over a in the campaign promised that if Cleveland was elected the affairs of the govern ment would be administered in an economical manner. The records of the Treasury Department tell the story. They show a decided falling off in the receipts of the government compared with the corresponding months of last year. The fig-

The Story of an Ohio Belle's Infatuation for

Said a gentleman stopping at the Mc-Lure House to an INTELLIGENCER reporter last evening: "Woman's fancy is past finding out, sure enough, and one of the most remarkable instances of woman's weakness I ever knew was singularly recalled to me to day, in this way. Being very tired and much travel-stained by reason of a long ride into this city I entered the barber shop in the hotel, and throwing myself into a chair I prepared to doze through a shave. The musical voice and really handsome face of the barber attracted my attention and grew upon me Finally I became convinced that in the dim vista of the past that face and voice were familiar to me. At last I asked him:

and voice were familiar to me. At last I saked him:

"Were you ever a soldler in camp at Delaware, Ohio."

"Yes, sir."

The identification was then complete, and here I can readily begin a strange story. I need not use any names. Every person not of the present generation in Delaware will know them without naming, and here in Wheeling names are not particularly to the purpose. Not far from the camp above referred to was a farm—a full section—belonging to the father of two pretty girls, and beyond their pretty faces and winning ways their prospects in broad fields and it ritle acres had enticed many an excursion of brawny armed swains from neighboring farms, as well as dapper-dressed clerks and seniors, specularly from the university in the Summerfield.
Leave Bellaire at 6:15 a. M. for Summerfield and Arrive at Bellaire 10:10 a. M. and 5:25 v. M. dapper-fressed clerks and seniors, speculative students from the university in the two mile distant town. And the journeys of one of these excursionis's were not in vain. One of these pretty maidens is now the stately matron who rolls about not in vain. One of these preity maidens is now the stately matron who rolls about the streets of a neighboring city in the stylish equippage of her wealthy merchant bushand. But still fancy free remained the other. And when a scourge broke out in the camp of the black-skinned warriors the heroism of this delicate girl in giving her, setive aid in nursing the unfortunate blacks in their desperate battle with the awful plague added not a little to her fame and stractiveness. It took a courage beyond defying a dread disease, for in those days a "nigger" was more a "nigger" than now, and peculiarly so in the North. When at last he scourge had spent its force and the quarantine of the camp was raised, this strong little heroine was more than ever sought after. Old offers were renewed, new ones made until her professed admirers could not be enumerated save by a census of the bachelors of all the available tarritory.

But still she heeded not the pleadings, and great was the marvel therest. Her visits to the camp

But still she heeded not the pleadings, and great was the marvel therest. Her visits to-the camp were continued until at last she who had escaped the fatal fangs of disease must soon fall a victim to the scourge of scandal.
